a bit of history...

Carrboro Connects is about reaching back and looking forward.

Through the Town's work to advance race and equity and the GARE Cohort, We are working to acknowledge the theft of indigenous homelands related to the founding of our country, the United States of America. Here in the Piedmont of North Carolina, land was historically inhabited by the Saponi and related Siouan-speaking peoples, including the Occaneechi, the Shakori, the Eno, and the Tutelo. The Occaneechi Band of the Saponi Nation has achieved North Carolina recognition and established a tribal homeland in Pleasant Grove, Alamance County. We encourage you to visit native-land.ca to look for the information on places you have lived or visited.

SITE OF OLD IRON MINE

A TEN FOOT VEIN OF RICH IRON ORE WAS MINED ON THIS SITE FROM 1872 TO 1882.
THE MINE WAS OWNED AND DEVELOPED
BY GENERAL ROBERT F. HOKE.

THE ORE WAS SHIPPED TO PENNSYLVANIA
FOR SMELTING VIA A SPUR RAILROAD
WHICH WAS BUILT CONNECTING THE SITE
TO THE SOUTHERN R.R. AT A JUNCTION
LATER NAMED "UNIVERSITY STATION". THE MINE WAS CLOSED IN 1882 DUE TO THE
DECLINING VALUE OF IRON ORE.

A DO-IT-YOURSELF WAY

How Frances Shetley Gets it Done

BY SUSAN DICKSON

Reprinted from The Carrboro Citizen, Feb. 17, 2011

There are few residents with roots as deep in this town as Frances Lloyd Shetley.

Though she grew up in Calverton, Shetley has lived on Hillsborough Road in Carrboro for 50 years. Her family has been in the area since the mid-1700s, when Thomas Lloyd – of whom Carr Mill's original owner Thomas Lloyd is a descendant – purchased land near Calverton.

Shetley went to school in the same building where Town Hall is now located and attended first grade in the same room where, 60 years later, she served as a member of the Carrboro Board of Aldermen for eight years, taking a stand on controversial town policies that hold strong nearly 20 years later.

How she came to sit on that board is indicative of Shetley's do-it-yourself way of approaching things.

In the 1970s, "I had something that I wanted to ask the town about," Shetley recalls. She went to speak with the town manager, who told her he was too busy to deal with her question.

"That should not happen," she said. So Shetley decided she would take matters into her own hands, becoming a part of the infrastructure of the town. Her first involvement in town government was as one of the founders of the Carrboro Appearance Commission.

"Two or three of us got together and went before the town board," she said. "They consisted of men, old-timers.

"One of them said, 'Doc, let's let the women have some bushes,'" she recalled, and the appearance commission was born. These days, the commission is about far more than bushes, making recommendations to the board of aldermen regarding proposed developments and other projects.

Shetley was also instrumental in saving Carr Mill, which was set to be destroyed and replaced with a shopping center in the mid-1970s.

"The community got together and said, this is something that's got to be saved," she said. Without it, "I think the town would be entirely different."

She also served on the Board of Ad-
